The county commissioners met in special session Monday and remitted Dan Kidd's fine and released him. Dan agreed to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor.

The city council met in regular session Monday night. Aside from the usual allowance of bills, there was nothing of special importance. J. B. Stockstill received his commission as waterworks superintendent and street commissioner.

One of the boys who assisted Mr. Hewett on the stage Monday night says he had to do everything the man told him. Doesn't know whether it was hypnotism or not.—Pratt Union.

Don't miss this entertainment at the opera house Nov. 9, 10 and 11. Seats on sale at usual place.

Eli C. Benedict who for some time past has been engaged in the raising of fine stock near Alva dropped a letter in the office asking that this paper be sent to Portales, N. M. Mr. Benedict says in his letter that he will locate in the inland valley, near Portales, and establish a stock farm there; he states his regrets at leaving his many friends in and about Alva and thanks his old patrons here who have treated him so well. Mr. Benedict is one of our best citizens and will make friends where he goes to make his new home.—Alva Review.

Sheriff Haun, County Attorney Tinsler and R. H. Hall returned home from their trip in taking the prisoners to Lansing, on Monday. Under the provisions of the new law the term of servitude depends entirely on their conduct and the judgment of the penitentiary board, but the minimum time must be served, which in John Tyree's case is five years and in Winters' and Cutler's at least one year. Tyree's maximum is 21 and Winters' and Cutler's five. The county attorney filed a favorable report with the board in each instance. The officers saw Oscar Crawford and Elmer Coryell who are now serving in the penitentiary. Both have good health. Mr. Crawford is working in the kitchen and Coryell in the furniture department. The work is rather hard but they complain very little. On his return home Sheriff Haun stopped at Topeka and went out to the asylum to see Robert Jesse. He reports little if any improvement in his condition.

About the Official Surgery.

Official Surgery is, as its name indicates, that branch of medical science which treats about the diseases peculiar to the orifices of the body in general. However its scope of teaching embraces mainly the operations about the lower part of the bowels; the bladder and its outlet; the womb including ovaries. This science which may more properly be called an art is of quite recent origin. Its father or chief exponent and promulgator, Dr. E. H. Pratt of Chicago, was the first to point out to the medical fraternity the relation that exists between the orifices of the body and man's general organism. It has since been recognized as a fact, that a person with defective orifices must as a consequence be of defective health. It may be his lips of his mouth; his nostrils, the eyes and ears, the lower outlets of the bowels, bladder or womb if not in a good healthy condition will influence unfavorably the health of such person somewhere in his or her makeup. This is particularly true of the outlets that are guarded by the sympathetic nerve. The nerve that presides over the circulation, respiration, digestion, nutrition, blood making, etc. It may be the haemorrhoidal tumor, the rectal catarrh or fissure, the ulcer on the womb or the stricture that offends it. Either of the above will act as a source of irritation to the nerve presiding over the injured locality. This is the unconscious and involuntary nerve. It never sleeps; it knows no rest. From the dawn of the birth until the last spark of life is extinguished this nerve is always watchful; always on guard looking after the individual's welfare. A man racked with pain or mental agony may go to sleep under the influence of drugs and forget for a time his suffering. The irritated sympathetic nerve will feel in its own way that it is offended and irritated—irritated every minute and every hour of the day and night without cessation and in the course of time will resent the offense in one or in many ways peculiar to its own, either by altering the function of an organ sometimes distant from the point of injury or by abolishing it altogether. Thus it may cut off a part of the usual circulation in the extremities, or in the brain causing cold hands and feet; dullness of mind, gloomy mood; melancholy disposition and a train of mental symptoms varied and numerous; sometimes so severe as to abolish some faculties of the mind. What else it may do? By altering the circulation and nutrition in the stomach and lungs it may produce shortness of breath, smothering palpitation of the heart, fainting spells and a variety of dyspeptic symptoms. Those who have read Physiology even in a cursory way will readily understand how altering the circulation in an organ will alter its function. This is true of the brain also. Knowing this, who will wonder that ulcerated lower orifices through the irritation of the sympathetic nerve will so affect the function of brain as to produce partial insanity. This accounts why confirmed dyspeptics become melancholy and may finally acquire suicidal mania.

I have noticed of late that taking a hint from Prof. Pratt's teachings and acting in the line of his theory some enterprising "Doctors" have produced and advertised for sale instruments for the purpose of stretching orifices of the body, claiming extraordinary cures for a multitude of the ills in the body. While their claims are out of proportion to the possibility of the result, it is nevertheless true that a thorough stretching will arouse the sympathetic nerves to their activity, open up the arterioles and flush the capillaries (smallest blood vessels) in all the organs of the body giving them new impetus, new life, new activity whether in the brain or in the lungs, liver, stomach or extremities. I am thoroughly convinced of the usefulness of the official surgery whose province is to remove the source of irritation to the nutrient nerves whether such irritation exists in the shape of piles, fissure, ulcers or contraction; which all are nothing else but a drain on the nervous force so necessary for man's sustenance and life. This belief and conviction comes from being an eye witness to a case of complete insanity in a young person, being caused by the defective lower orifices. Cases of asthma, hiccup, palpitation were also cured by official surgery. Troubles in different organs were also cured by a removal of irritation at the lower orifices. If a vessel with a valuable liquid spring a leak the owner thereof will look it all over until he finds the leakage; then he proceeds to stop it. Is there anything more valuable to a person—man or woman—than the nervous force which gives them health, vigor and beauty. Poor health is always caused by drain on a nervous force which is wasting away at some defective point within the organism. The indication is plain: look it all over and around your economy to find the defective spot. There may be more than one. There may be some in your lungs, in your stomach, bowels, womb or the bladder. It may be a pile, a fissure, an ulcer, abnormal growth or a diseased organ, such as kidney, lung or womb. Such defects that can be reached and removed by surgical means, especially those coming within the range of the official surgery, can in majority of cases be removed with comparative ease and dispatch, the patient regaining health immediately thereafter.

We learn and acquire experience as we grow older, if we study and observe. The world grows wiser every day.

This is only a part of what I have learned about the official surgery in Chicago from Dr. Pratt, by seeing, observing and study. I would not take big money in exchange for it. It has brought to my memory many instances and cases seen before, that were hard to understand then, but now seem clear. I can recall some incurable cases going rounds from doctor to doctor, visiting mineral springs in search of health that was gradually fading away and waning on account of waste of the nervous force which was draining away through the channels least suspected.

What I have learned I will divide with those of the public who will read, observe and think. In hope it will be sometime of benefit to them. I will, before closing, also add, that in order to place myself in a position to be able to help those who may need the medication along the line above sketched out I have procured for myself a set of instruments such as Dr. Pratt uses himself in official operations, everyone of which I am confident I can handle to the advantage of my patients whether in the removal of haemorrhoidal tumors and correcting abnormal conditions such as ulcers, fissures, removal of varicocele or other trouble in that locality. DR. KOCIELL.
